Service before self: The story of the ‘Four Chaplains’

By Lt. Col. (Chap.) Paul Cannon
Wolf Pack chapel

There are many examples in military history of our Air Force core value “Service Before Self.” I am proud, as a chaplain, to share with you the story of four heroic chaplains.

In early 1943, as the United States was locked in conflict in World War II, the U.S. Army transport ship Dorchester set sail from the east coast of the United States. The Dorchester was packed with more than 900 American military personnel bound for England. It was one of three troop transport ships traveling in a convoy accompanied by three Coast Guard cutters.

The weather in the North Atlantic Ocean was bad and the troop transport ships were bounced around in the rough seas. On board the Dorchester, the four chaplains made their rounds through the ship, lifting the spirits of the men through visits, worship services and special programs.

The four chaplains were George Fox, Clark Poling, John Washington and Alexander Goode. Fox and Poling were Protestant chaplains, while Washington was a Catholic priest and Goode a Jewish rabbi.

As the convoy got further from the safe shores of America, the personnel on board were aware they were entering dangerous waters. German submarines patrolled the seas, and hundreds of Americans had perished when German torpedoes sank other troop transport ships.

The tension and nervousness on board the Dorchester mounted, and the four chaplains did what they could to bring a sense of calm and peace.

On the evening of Feb. 2, one of the escort cutters detected a German submarine on its sonar. The ships in the convoy tried to steer in an evasive pattern, but at 1 a.m. the next day, a German sub fired a torpedo at the Dorchester. The torpedo struck far below the water line, hitting the Dorchester near the engine room.

The explosion killed a hundred men instantly and knocked out its power. The ship quickly began filling with seawater. After only a few minutes, the captain of the Dorchester ordered his men to abandon ship. Below deck in the darkness, chaos ensued. Men scrambled to find their way to the staircases leading up to the deck. At the top of a stairwell was a large storage locker containing life jackets.

The four chaplains positioned themselves beside the storage locker, handed out life vests to the men as they came on deck, and pointed them the way to the lifeboats.

Soon the storage locker was depleted and no life jackets remained, leaving many men without life jackets. In an act of selfless service, all four chaplains took off their own life jackets and handed them to men who had none.

Twenty seven minutes after the torpedo hit the Dorchester, the ship listed heavily and began to go down. The four chaplains stood together on the deck of the sinking ship, arms locked tightly, their heads bowed in prayer. One survivor said, “It was the finest thing I have ever seen this side of heaven.”

Eyewitness accounts from survivors of the four heroic chaplains spread. In 1944 each of the chaplains was posthumously awarded the Distinguished Service Cross for “extraordinary heroism.”

In 1951, the “Chapel of the Four Chaplains” was dedicated in their honor in Pennsylvania and the Chapel of the Four Chaplains continues today promoting service before self and religious cooperation between faith groups.

None of us know what kinds of challenges lie ahead or what kinds of sacrifices we may be called to make. Whatever the future holds, we can find inspiration in the example of the four heroic chaplains that we too might put the needs of others ahead of our own, and ourselves become examples of Service Before Self.

‘Operation Air Force’ in full swing

By Cadet 2nd Class Marshal Slater
Wolf Pack public affairs

Nearly three weeks ago, 14 cadets from the Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs, Colo., arrived at the Wolf Pack, as part of the Air Force’s initiative to provide an operational perspective to future leaders.

To bridge the collegiate gap between the Academy and commissioning, the Air Force launched Operation Air Force.

The program, existing for over 20 years, gives upcoming sophomores, juniors and seniors the opportunity to gain valuable experience, knowledge and an appreciation for the Air Force.

“I was surprised to be chosen to come to Korea, especially Kunsan,” says Cadet 1st Class Jimmy Kellenbence, a senior at the Academy. “It has given me a new perspective on how every function works together to complete a mission. Not to mention the importance of unit cooperation; the Wolf Pack is such a tightly-knit wing; all the operational squadrons know everyone who works support. It’s amazing.”

Each cadet is randomly assigned to one of 75 active-duty Air Force bases worldwide.

“Operation Air Force is an outstanding opportunity for the Air Force Academy cadets,” according to Capt. Christopher

Lombardo, 80th Aircraft Maintenance Unit officer-in-charge and OAF coordinator. “Whether they’re learning about several different career fields or concentrating on their assigned career field, the cadets get to see what it takes to keep the Wolf Pack ready to Take the Fight North!”

The three-week period is broken in half with each cadet divided into either an operation or support squadron. Cadets then switch to experience what the other “side” is like and how the two function, allowing the wing to operate at its full potential.

“After receiving my pilot slot at the end of the school year, I never thought I would be working with maintenance,” says C1C John Sparks after being assigned to the 8th Maintenance Squadron. “I’m glad I got to see what they do. I mean, without maintenance, planes wouldn’t take off. They play a vital role in maintaining the Air Force’s ability to carry out their mission, especially here.”

Cadets are encouraged to embody the lifestyle and values of their assigned base, and to observe and learn from their assigned mentors. The Wolf Pack leaders welcomed cadets, eager to share valuable advice on how to succeed in today’s Air Force.

Capt. Lombardo urged each cadet to remember the uniqueness of the ‘Kun’ and their glimpse into the daily operations of the last true warrior base.

Operation Air Force continues with more cadets, running through Aug. 5.

“Staff Sgt. Veesser has had a dramatic impact on the combat capability of the 8th Fighter Wing since his arrival in April 2005. Sgt. Veesser’s weekly responsibilities include a busy schedule of teaching survival, evasion, resistance and escape, or SERE lessons, to a variety of audiences. His extensive knowledge in this area provides aircrew with the critical training they need to survive in an ejection situation during both peacetime and combat.

His impact on the quality of SERE training at the 8th FW was validated by the Pacific Air Force headquarters UCI team who described the SERE shop as the ‘most squared away in PACAF.’

He is certainly deserving of being recognized as the Pride of the Pack.”

SEA huts at Wolf Pack replace tents, compliments of RED HORSE engineers

Civil engineer 'Total Force' effort rids Kunsan of austere living conditions

By Senior Airman Stephen Collier
Wolf Pack public affairs

It's the 21st century and living accommodations at Kunsan's Wolf Pack Park, normally inhabited by those deployed in support of various Air Force Expeditionary assignments, have been brought into the new century.

Thirty South-East Asia huts, commonly referred to as SEA huts because of their popularity during the Vietnam War, were recently finished in time to house approximately 300 Air National Guard servicemembers. The huts replaced the long-standing tradition of tent construction that greeted arriving forces at Kunsan.

"Follow-on forces [to the Wolf Pack] will have a better quality of living," said Chief Master Sgt. Jeffrey Slocum, 554th RED HORSE squadron chief enlisted manager at Osan AB. "Because of the SEA huts, these forces will not have to put up and tear down tents when they arrive. With an increased capacity for power, lighting and air conditioning, Wolf Pack Park provides for a more 'civilized' living area."

The $320,000 project, with each hut costing approximately $8,000, began in late 2005 with a survey of the park to determine construction needs. With concrete slabs for tents already in place, RED HORSE teams began construction in January and ended in late May in time for follow-on forces arriving at Kunsan.

Once the 8th Civil Engineer Squadron placed a request to construct the huts, Chief Slocum said RED HORSE chose the project because of the benefit to both the Wolf Pack mission and the unit's training program.

"The 8th Civil Engineer Squadron asked RED HORSE [to take on the project] because we can do the work cheaper than a contractor, and it provided us with a great training opportunity for our craftsman to develop and improve their skills," he said.

But the work did not come from just the engineers at Osan. More than 20 personnel from the Guam ANG as well as 52 from the 307th RHS located at Barksdale AFB, La., and 56 personnel assigned to the 555th RHS at Nellis AFB, Nev., deployed in support of the project. The chief said in then end the project was a total force effort.

"We had many challenges [during the project] including the integration of Guard and Reserve troops who came over to help us with our construction this year," he said. "It all went well, but maximizing available skills and manpower against a tight schedule was a daily challenge. The credit goes to the entire crew for the great workmanship and tremendous teamwork."

RED HORSE is the term coined for rapid engineering deployable heavy operations repair squadron engineers. According to RED HORSE historical Web site redhorseassociation.org, the 554th is the only known "Total Force" squadron in the Air Force.

Chief Slocum said the work the RED HORSE team performed at Kunsan held true to its motto of "Semper Ducimis," or always lead.

"Everyone worked together very well as one RED HORSE team and we're very proud of what we accomplish in that 'one team, one fight' mindset."

HEAT STRESS

threatens Wolf Pack

Protect Yourself

Senior Airman Craig Kibble, 8th Maintenance Operations Squadron, has felt the effects of heat stroke. When he was 8 years old, he was playing soccer at a summer camp and passed out from the heat for five minutes. Camp employees were there to assist him.

Heat stress

When the body is unable to cool itself by sweating, several heat-induced illnesses such as heat stress or heat exhaustion and the more severe heat stroke can occur, and can result in death.

Factors leading to heat stress

High temperature and humidity; direct sun or heat; limited air movement; physical exertion; poor physical condition; some medicines; and inadequate tolerance for hot workplaces.

Symptoms of heat exhaustion

- Headaches, dizziness, lightheadedness or fainting.
- Weakness and moist skin.
- Mood changes such as irritability or confusion.
- Upset stomach or vomiting.

Symptoms of heat stroke

- Dry, hot skin with no sweating.
- Mental confusion or losing consciousness.
- Seizures or fits.

Preventing heat stress

- Know signs/symptoms of heat-related illnesses; monitor yourself and coworkers.
- Block out direct sun or other heat sources.
- Use cooling fans/air-conditioning; rest regularly.
- Drink lots of water; about 1 cup every 15 minutes.
- Wear lightweight, light colored, loose-fitting clothes.
- Avoid alcohol, caffeinated drinks, or heavy meals.

What to do for heat-related illness

- Call 911 at once.

While waiting for help to arrive

- Move the person to a cool, shaded area.
- Loosen or remove heavy clothing.
- Provide cool drinking water.
- Fan and mist the person with water.
